

Trust In JM Insulation

Students at a new nursing college in Colorado are preparing for future careers in health care. CD Insulation used Johns Manville pipe and duct insulation to keep everything in the new building running smoothly.

Big or small, new construction or remodel – whatever the project, having products and manufacturers you trust is important.

For CD Insulation, Johns Manville is a go-to. It's why when the company was tapped for pipe insulation work at the Galen College of Nursing in Aurora, Colorado, they used JM products.

"It's our brand," said Rob Minch, General Superintendent, simply. "That's what we always try to use. It's pretty much in almost every spec I read as far as materials go, with JM as the first one listed. We think JM is the best material out there. The consistency in sizing of the actual fabrication of insulation, that makes JM so good."

Great praise from a company with 30 years in the business. Based in Colorado Springs, CD Insulation does primarily HVAC and plumbing insulation on commercial buildings.

Building a New Nursing School

CD Insulation began their part of the project around March 2024, on what Minch described as a “slow-paced” build. The three-story building was a standard project with above and below ambient temperature piping in need of insulation.

“We had heated and chilled water, and domestic water, plus the duct work,” Minch said. “Typically, we only needed two men there working on any given day, with the pace of it. Just a pretty standard project all around.”

For the piping, CD Insulation used Micro-Lok® HP fiberglass pipe insulation, as well as Zeston® PVC fittings and jacketing in white. Minch said he likes the Zeston because it’s “just made the best and fits really well.”

On the ducts, they installed Microlite® White PSK duct wrap, another product Minch spoke highly of.

“It’s not dusty, which makes a huge difference,” he said.

CD Insulation ordered their needed JM products as the project progressed, thanks in part to the pace of the build, and work was completed by the end of the year.
